As Higher Energy Demand Soars Over the Next 20 Years, the Role for Natural Gas Increases

By Paul Silver

According to ExxonMobil's report titled "Outlook for Energy: A View to 2030", global energy demand will be approximately 35% higher in 2030 versus 2005, with demand in developing nations rising by more than 70%, even as efficiency improvements help curb energy consumption. Energy demand from 2005 through 2030 is forecast to grow by 1.2% per year; during that time, the global population is expected to grow by 0.9% per year, and gross domestic product will grow at an average 2.8% per year. The potential for future energy growth in developing nations is significant as 2.5 billion people worldwide still have no access to modern fuels used in cooking; another 1.4 billion people have no access to any kind of electricity.

ExxonMobil's William M. Colton, vice president of corporate strategic planning believes that the global energy supply mix will continue to evolve, but oil, natural gas and coal will continue to meet most of the world's energy needs during this period as no other energy sources can meet their availability, versatility, affordability and scale. Transportation will drive oil demand growth, and liquid fuels remain the fuel of choice for transportation. No technology so far has been able to outperform oil and gasoline in terms of convenience and economics. For planes and cars, it's hard to beat the energy density of oil and gas.

The demand for natural gas will continue to grow through 2030, becoming the second mostly widely used fuel ahead of coal, as government policies worldwide will favor the use of cleaner-burning gas, considered more reliable and affordable than other energy resources, to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Demand for natural gas for power generation is expected to rise by approximately 85% from 2005 to 2030 when gas will provide more than a quarter of the world's electricity needs. Gas demand is growing in every global region but is strongest in developing countries, especially China, where demand in 2030 will be approximately six times what it was in 2005. Global gas supply will continue to expand, particularly in the U.S. where unconventional gas supplies are expected to meet more than 50% of gas demand by 2030.

The growing use of gas and other less-carbon intensive energy supplies, combined with greater energy efficiency worldwide, will help mitigate environmental impacts of increased energy demand. According to the report, global energy-related carbon dioxide emissions growth will be lower than the projected average rate of growth in energy demand. While renewable energy sources such as wind and biofuels are projected to grow at nearly 10% on average through 2030, their contribution by 2030 is likely to remain relatively small at about 2.5% of total energy as they are starting from a small base. "Under any scenario, gas remains an attractive fuel for its abundance and lower emissions," Colton said.

Halliburton reports strong financial results driven by uptick in unconventional natural gas activity.

For the full year 2010, Halliburton reported revenue of $18 billion for the full year 2010, an increase of 22% from the full year 2009, and consolidated operating income was $3.0 billion, an increase of 51% from the full year 2009. These increases were largely attributable to the improved North America business, with higher activity in the unconventional natural gas and oil basins more than offsetting restrained international markets and the effects of the suspension of deepwater activity in the Gulf of Mexico. Dave Lesar, Halliburton’s chairman, president, and chief executive officer commented: “Looking into 2011, operators in North America continue to make the exploitation of unconventional resources the focus of their investment.”

WSR's Aggressive Growth and Speculator Focus Lists

Companies included in the WSR-Aggressive Growth list are primarily companies based outside of our home state of Florida and are generally trading at a significant discount to their peers, breaking out of long-term bases or have recently announced a significant event. To qualify for inclusion, companies in the WSR-Aggressive Growth portfolio must have a market capitalization less than $500 million and must have met a certain number of valuation and performance based hurdles including but not limited to revenue growth, PEG ratio, tangible book value, and profitability.

Companies included in WSR-Speculator portfolio are typically early stage or turnaround companies which are frequently WSR clients and (in our opinion) have the potential for a three hundred percent return over the next three to five years. Changes to these lists are emailed to WSR's subscribers via its Daily Notes publication and are updated each month in The Emerging Growth News.

JANUARY’S TOP COMPANIES UNDER $5.00 AS MEASURED BY INSIDER BUYING:

Investors and analysts look to the buying and selling trends of insiders, who are typically long-term investors, for clues to the broader market outlook. According to Ben Silverman, InsiderScore.com's director of research, "Insiders have been very accurate in terms of calling market bottoms, both temporary, in terms of corrections, and troughs."

Although insider buying is a useful tool to consider when making a decision on which stock to buy, it should be looked at carefully lest it give a false positive signal. Investors need to look behind the headlines and conduct their own research before buying on this basis. For example, option exercises can also give false signals. This section summarizes the companies (trading under $5.00 per share) with the greatest amount of purchasing by insiders during the previous month.

Companies with Net Buying Percentage

The chart on the left illustrates the 4 and 13 week trailing average “Net Buying” in relationship to the entire market. In other words, what percent of the stocks in the entire market have net insider buying. In theory, the higher the percent the greater the indication that the overall market will increase in price.
